

CHRISTOFER LARSSON:

How to design the next generation of communication networks?

We will look at the probabilistic theory of traffic generated by the users and of the network - the serving machine. We are faced with several problems: NP-hard topology design problems and long-range dependent traffic due to heavy data from applications like social media. The foundation is based on classical telecommunications engineering and its extensions to the principles used today.